

The Unknown

Curse

“Hi, mum! I’m home, Mum! Mum! Are you in? Oh Well I bet she’s in the garden!” Kay yelled as she walked in from school. She slammed her extremely heavy schoolbag down on the smooth floor of the living room and clumsily sat down to read her favourite magazine, the Horse and Hound.

Kay hated school but she was so excited, it was Friday and she was going out to dinner with a great friend. She arrived but no one was there, they were running away. CRASH something was in there!

Kay slowly walked in, it was deserted, and absolutely nothing in sight other than turned over tables, food everywhere. It was a complete mess. Her stomach cringed with fear, then she felt fine but the smell, a rotten, revolting smell. She thought the smell wouldn’t be in the cellar so she ran to the cellar door holding her breath.

She swung open the cellar door. There it was. The unknown monster. The Grudge!

“AHHHHH!!!” Kay screamed hoping that someone would come but no one came. She was alone. Just her and the monster, The Grudge...

“Get out, now, quick!!!!!!” a voice screeched from outside. Kay scrambled to her feet as quick as she possibly could. With the Grudge, walking towards her, she ran out of the restaurant. She stopped and looked behind her. The Grudge had disappeared. Kay looked forward to see the Grudge standing in front of her.

“ Time to die,” the Grudge continued, “Come with me or you’ll die!” Kay was trembling so much she couldn’t escape. The Grudge galumphed towards her. Was she going to die? She closed her eyes. When she opened them she was in the cursed house. The Grudge’s home...

She found herself tied up, tied up to a piece of burnt wood that held up the house. The Grudge turned round holding a machete. His eyes shot up.

“AHHHHHHHHHHHHHHH!!!!!!” Kay yelled pulling a horrified face at the sight of the Grudge’s missing mouth. He lit the match and threw it at Kay. The house was on fire. Kay was sweating whilst yelling. “It’s too hot, let me out, you beast!!!!”

The Grudge left the house in a major hurry and left Kay to burn. The scream that she let out echoed through the whole city. Thousands of years later. The house lay as ruins and the Grudge was taking over the earth. In 3 years the Grudge ruled the world....
